

Summary

The topic of the research: The peculiarities of compound words formation in modern German publicism

The author: Vasilenko Natalia Valerjewna

Supervisor: Morozova M.E. Professor of the Chair of Germanistics and intercultural Communication

The real final qualification work is carried out in line with language and culture interaction on a material of the facts of word formation in modern German. The sphere of word-formation processes set publicistic texts.

As object of research the compound word from two or several roots acts. Relevance of conducted research is explained by the increased rate of the use of compound words in the modern German press and preference of word-formation model of a composition to other word-formation models in modern German.

Objective of this research is consideration of the most significant and most common ways of formation of a compound word on a material of the modern German press.

As material of research the German publicistic texts from the periodical press presented by magazines "Brigitte", "Focus", "Stern", "Spiegel" served. As methods of research statistical processing of a studied empirical material and the comparative and comparative analysis of the meeting facts served in the modern German press.

The conducted research showed the steady growth of new growths with more, than two bases. From the allocated six groups of the examples corresponding to actual models of the German word formation, models of production of compound words by an adjunction or by means of the connecting concordant, but in the form similar to an adjunction appeared the most productive. Formation of new nouns on these models allows to expand considerably dictionary structure of German.